Trauma Response Patterns

The Four Trauma Responses

When faced with threat, the nervous system automatically selects a survival response. None is "wrong" — they all serve survival.

FIGHT / قتال

- Body: clenched jaw/fists, hot face, raised voice, urge to attack
- Emotions: anger, rage, irritability, defensiveness
- Thoughts: "I need to dominate/control this situation"
- Healing: Physical outlets (boxing, running), assertiveness training

FLIGHT / هرب

- Body: restless legs, shallow breathing, urge to leave, hyper-vigilance
- Emotions: anxiety, fear, panic, urgency
- Thoughts: "I need to get out of here immediately"
- Healing: Safe movement (walking, stretching), gradual exposure

FREEZE / تجميد

- Body: stillness, numbness, slow/hold breath, dissociation
- Emotions: numb, blank, detached, hopeless
- Thoughts: "I can't move or do anything"
- Healing: Orienting, gentle movement, sensory reconnection

FAWN / تملق

- Body: compliant posture, smiling despite distress, people-pleasing
- Emotions: guilt, shame, anxiety about others' reactions
- Thoughts: "If I make them happy, I'll be safe"
- Healing: Boundary practice, self-advocacy, recognizing own needs

تذكير مهم

Important Reminder

All four responses are ADAPTATIONS — your nervous system did what it needed to survive. None is a weakness. Recovery means expanding your choices beyond automatic responses.

جميع الاستجابات الأربع هي تكيفات – جهازك العصبي فعل ما يحتاجه للنجاة . لا ضعف في أي منها .
